INTRO

The Galactic Federation Of Space Dance and Music introduces it's new mission plan:

The DANCENAUTS

The mission is going to send astronauts to space with a huge speaker and blast mu-sic for the entire world while the astronauts dance in zero gravity in outer space.

It's what the world needs.

The video follows the dance-astronauts as they go through space training at the Galactic Federation's special training facility.

SYNOPSIS

The video begins 15 years ago, as a young girl is watching a space launch on her television.

Later, as she's going to sleep in her bed she looks to a big poster on the wall. It's an advertisement for the Galactic Federation's space program.

The girl wants nothing more than to become a dancenaught.

We cut to the present day.

The young girl has turned into a fit woman who is about to begin her space training in the Federation's secret facility. There are three other astronauts in the training, one woman and two men.

The space training isn't anything like a regular space training. These astronauts main goal is to dance in space and have a good time.

Their teacher is a hardcore guy, someone like J.K. Simmons in "Whiplash". He knows what's needed and he sure knows how to dance.

Our dancenauts watch an introduction video. The video is a classy but simple animation explaining how they plan to send the dancenauts and a huge speaker to orbit.

The Dancenauts now begin their training, where:

1. They practise dancing in no gravity. No gravity is simulated by having the four of them hanging on a bar while they dance.

It's almost like they are floating as they dance completely synchronized in the air.

2. They sit in a chair in front of a huge speaker where they are hit in the face with an crazy unhealthy amount of bass.

They have to learn to withstand the force of such a huge speaker while having a good time.

3. They dance in special 'Dance Space Suits'. While they dance, images from other planets and stars are projected on their body, simulating outer space.

4. Space is full of lasers, so they have to learn 'Mission Impossible style' how to not block the lasers that will be shot from the spacecraft to earth. They dance over and around the lasers.

We intercut the training exercises with shots from the introduction video where it explains what's next in training.

We also see the teacher busting couple of moves, showing them how it's done.

The training is finally coming to an end, and the four dancenauts are going into the unknown, to space.

The dancenauts walk towards their dance spacecraft, their childhood dream finally becoming a reality. This is going to be so much fun.

Their hard-ass teacher salutes them with a final dance move and tears up as they leave.

The dance-craft thrusts into air, the first live show from outer space is finally becoming a reality.

DIRECTORS NOTES

We are super excited about developing this further.

The video will be sexy, colorful, funny and different, completely revolutionising everything you thought about dancing in space.

LOOKING FORWARD TO YOUR THOUGHTS
